Keratin Vs. Botox: Which Hair Treatment Is Right For You?

If you're looking for silky, frizz-free hair, keratin and hair botox are two of the most popular salon treatments for achieving your goal. Both keratin and hair botox have similar results; however, they go about it in different ways, and the right one will depend on the needs of your hair and what you want to accomplish with your styling.

Keratin treatments are great for controlling hair and frizz because they use methods which infuse keratin protein into the hair shaft. The keratin seals the cuticle as you get not only smoother looking hair but shinier, more manageable strands. These treatments work best on curly hair and wavy hair to achieve a sleeker look since it cuts drying time dramatically, with results lasting anywhere from 3-5 months.

The term hair botox, despite its name, does not contain any botulinum toxin. Instead, doesn't a deep conditioning treatment that includes nutrients, amino acids, and vitamins that help repair, strengthen, and moisturize your hair from the inside out. The process is not as strong of a keratin treatment, and while hair botox does not straighten hair, it does improve strength, softness, elasticity and shine. The treatment is also a great solution for people who struggle with dry hair, split ends, or have chemically damaged hair.

So, which treatment is right for you? Go with keratin if you desire smooth, straight results and frizz-control. Go with hair botox if your emphasis is on deep hydration, repairing, and keeping natural texture.

Whatever you choose, call the professionals at Professional Hair Treatment Salon in Littleton, and they will be glad to assess your hair type and recommend the best solution for you based on your lifestyle. They will use their knowledge and tool's precision to guarantee healthy, beautiful results you'll love.

Beautiful hair is not just about style, beautiful hair is about care. If you treat your hair properly, it will reward you with shine, strength, and confidence.